FRESNO RISES TO HAWAIIANS

Morris and Paton Catch the Town With Their Exhibition.

(Special to the Advertiser.)

SAN FRANCISCO, May 1.—There seems to be some striking affinity between Fresno and Hawaii—between the country of raisins and that of taro. Only a few months ago a Fresno girl whose heart yearned for a keeper, sent a message at hazard through the world asking that he who read it answer whether his heart, too, had the aching void which love alone could fill.

It will be remembered that a Honolulu man got the message. The sender, like most Fresno ladies, is interested in raisins. Her pleasure is to sort and pack the dried grapes, paste pretty pictures on the boxes and line them with lace paper. Several thousand other beauties of Fresno have the same tastes and spend their days in the big packing houses in the same manner.

There are many more women than men in Fresno, and so hundreds of the proud maidens sigh in vain for sweethearts. Their practice is to pack with the raisins scented billets-doux, confessing their loneliness. The Honolulu man opened one of these boxes and was struck by Cupid's dart before he had even a chance to sample the material sweets.

Unfortunately he had already given pledges to the god of love, and the thought of a wife and several infants at home in Honolulu restrained him from replying in kind to the amorous raisin girl. But the printing in the Fresno papers of the receipt of the message and the susceptibility of Hawaiians to such influences made a great stir.

Now the Hawaiian sextette which accompanies Morris and Paton on their lecture tour is in Fresno, and the town is wild over the music and the music makers. The young women forsake the raisin packing to flock about the handsome kanakas who are trying to prove the unsympathetic Honolulu man to have been an exception, by their ample return of any affection bestowed on them.

Even the musical critic of the Fresno Republican feels the charm of the seductive strains, and says:

The Royal Hawaiian Sextette was thunderously received last night at the Barton opera house at the concert given under the auspices of Wawona Co. No. 1, Uniform Rank of Knights of Pythias, and Dr. Dunn, the enterprising manager of the entertainment, deserves the thanks of the community for procuring such a delightful evening for lovers of music. There was a good house, and one that was intensely enthusiastic. The music is by songs, guitars and flute. There is something peculiarly seductive and fascinating in this plaintive music from the Isles of the Southern Seas. Most of it is native to the islands. Its dreamy cadences, and soft soothing sounds strike the ear like the gentle murmurs from the wave caressed sands of a tropical beach, bringing back recollections of waving palms, luscious forms of dancing girls, sparkling eyes, and the moonlit scenes on the beach of Waikiki, the Beautiful. It also recalls sad memories of Robert Louis Stevenson, and his sad death in the Samoan Islands among the peoples he had learned to love so well.

It is irresistibly suggestive of restfulness, indolence, peace, contentment, manana and dolce far niente, so strikingly characteristic of the coral atolls of the Pacific. The seductive influence of the music, one who has once visited there alone can appreciate and which, when one has been thoroughly inoculated with its noxious delights, finds it almost impossible to eradicate. It is said that one who has once lived there for any considerable time is content nowhere else. This music is delightful for it lulls its hearer into forgetfulness of the past and the future, and leaves him with an eye single to the present pleasure.

There are no great voices in the sextette and no great instrumentalists, but the group as a whole, the harmony and lift make up for this, and the audience never tires of it, and constantly clamors for more.

As part of the performance, a lecture, illustrated with stereopticon views, is given. The history and resources of the islands are interestingly portrayed. Visits are made to Mauna Loa, Honolulu, the rice and sugar fields and factories, and many other things of interest.

The concert will be repeated, and those who enjoy music and are interested in the islands should attend, for nowhere can one get so well an understanding of them without a visit, as by an attendance at this concert.

TWO PRINCES COMPROMISE

Sister Albertina, trustee for Stella R. Cockett, compromised yesterday with the Kapiolani estate, whereby the Princes David Kawanakoa and Jonah Kalaniana'ole acquire all of Mrs. Cockett's right, title and interest in and to about three and three-quarter acres of land in Papoia for $12,000, a quit claim deed being given. This brings to a close the legal proceedings in the Circuit Court in which Sister Albertina was plaintiff and the Kapiolani estate was defendant in an action to quiet title.

The Bishop estate has a claim of a quarter interest in the same three and three-quarter acres and the two Princes will yet have to deal with that estate before acquiring full and complete ownership of the property. Superintendent Atkinson, of the Department of Education, occupies a portion of the premises, and has for thirty years.

The oleomargarine bill has gone to the President for signature.

Count Korolono, Italian Minister of War, has resigned.
